Part B (70 marks)

Your good friend, Jacqueline, sent you an email last week (see below). Write a reply to her email in NO LESS THAN 250 words.

Dear Matilda,

Thanks for your warm birthday wish last week. I can't believe that I'm sixteen years old now. In spite of having a great birthday celebration, I'm resentful about how my parents treat me. Please help me!

You know I live with my parents and a fourteen-year-old brother. A few years ago, everything was normal as my brother and I enjoyed equal freedom. However, recently my parents have started treating my brother very differently than they treat me and I feel cross about it.

Despite being younger than me, my brother gets all the freedom he wants. For instance, he can choose his clothes, his friends, the kind of music he likes and his hobbies. He is never told off even though he gets back home late, leaves the house whenever he likes and never asks for permission. He is on cloud nine all the time whereas I am down in the dumps. I am not allowed to leave the house without asking first and telling my parents exactly where I am going and whom with. They are breathing down my neck and controlling my life. I want to go on a school trip next week but they won't let me. All my friends will go, so I really want to go too.

Do your parents treat you as how mine do to me? How can I persuade them to let me go on the school trip? Plus, what should I do to get as much freedom as my brother does? Please help. I can't stand this unfair treatment anymore and I think it is high time that I took the bull by the horns!

Regards,
Jacqueline
